Especially since the reality is that the advisor has nothing to do with the â€œgoodâ€• performance during up years, nor the â€œbadâ€• performance during bear markets, both of which are really just the result of the markets themselves.

The Problem With Benchmarking To (Financial Planning) Goals

To try to understand whether people really were this bad at the task or whether perhaps the task itself was flawed, I ran some more stats. One thing I wanted to understand, in particular, was whether inter-rater agreement was high. In other words, when rating resumes, were participants disagreeing with each other more often than youâ€™d expect to happen by chance?
