Submissions are encouraged to cover a broad range of topics on the various applications of remote sensing techniques, which may include, but are not limited to, the following topics: (i) mapping and analysis of landslide conditioning and triggering factors, (ii) supplement of data for landslide hazard models, (iii) landslide motion detection ...

Remote Sensing | Special Issue : Landslide Hazard and Risk
Aerial and space remote sensing provide valuable tools for desertification studies, although, as for any other natural hazard related study, they must be combined with ground-collected data. The use of remote sensing methods should minimize the need for ground data, therefore saving time and resulting quite inexpensive per unit of data.
